

At Rosina, our wine list is a love letter to Italy — to its wild patchwork of vineyards, its centuries of winemaking obsession, and the families who still know every inch of their land by heart. Italy has more indigenous grape varieties than days of the year, and we proudly celebrate the weird, wonderful and deeply regional bottles that come from them. From volcanic Sicilian reds to crisp northern whites, these are wines with stories, character and a strong sense of place.
An ode to long lunches, stained tablecloths and life lived a little more slowly.

Organic Wine

Organic wine starts in the vineyard, where healthier soils and thriving ecosystems take priority over quick fixes. Sharing much of the philosophy behind Italy's Slow Food movement, it champions biodiversity, seasonality and respect for the land. It also requires a lot more work — often four times as many hours in the vineyard. Fortunately for us, all that hard work tends to taste rather good in the glass.

Biodynamic Wine

Rooted in the principles of Rudolf Steiner, biodynamic farming takes organic principles a step further, treating the vineyard as a living ecosystem. Guided by the seasons and often the lunar calendar, its growers are not afraid to get a little philosophical along the way. It can sound slightly eccentric — moon phases, biodiversity and all — but the goal is simple: healthier soils, healthier vines and wines that express a true sense of place. After all, some of the best things in life require a little faith.

2008

Rosina is named after Adam's daughter, Rosie, and this 2008 vintage celebrates her birth year. A year of contrasts and extremes, 2008 was marked by moments that shaped the world: Barack Obama was elected on a message of hope, while global financial markets faced historic collapse. The 2008 Beijing Summer Olympics captivated audiences worldwide, and I Kissed a Girl by Katy Perry filled the airwaves. In the vineyards across Europe, growers faced a cooler, more challenging season that produced wines of freshness, tension and bright acidity rather than easy opulence. Yet time has been kind to 2008. The vintage has slowly revealed a quieter beauty: graceful, composed and layered with character — much like the memories and milestones it now carries with it.

Champagne & Sparkling

Sparkling wine may be synonymous with Champagne, but the story of fizz is far broader — and far more entertaining. Early sparkling wines were often accidental, caused by unfinished fermentations that reawakened in spring, sending bottles exploding across cellar floors and earning Champagne the nickname "the devil's wine". Italians, naturally, took a more relaxed approach to bubbles, creating styles for every mood and table: the bright sociability of Prosecco, the serious bottle-aged elegance of Franciacorta, and the joyous frothy reds of Lambrusco.

Rosato

Rosé wine is in fact one of the oldest wine styles in history, enjoyed in various forms since Roman times. Italy, however, does a beautifully more gastronomic style of rosé — wines with freshness and charm, but also savoury character and enough structure to sit comfortably at the table alongside food.

North Italy

Valle d'Aosta - Liguria - Piedmont – Lombardy – Trentino-Alto Adige - Veneto -Friuli-Venezia Giulia - Emilia-Romagna

Italy's north is where serious wine culture begins — shaped by Alpine climates, historic trade routes and generations of winemakers refining their craft. In Piemonte, Barolo earned the title "the wine of kings and the king of wines," favoured by the House of Savoy, who famously served it at royal banquets during Italy's unification. Further east, Venetian merchants helped spread Italian wine across Europe through one of history's great trading hubs. Today, northern Italy produces some of the country's most classic styles: crisp whites, structured reds and elegance all around. It is also the home of rich risottos, butter, dairy and truffle-heavy cooking — wines with the acidity and refinement to match.

Central Italy

Tuscany - Abruzzo – Umbria – Lazio - Marche

Central Italy is the heartland of Italian wine — rolling hills, medieval towns and vineyards that have fed poets, pilgrims and noble families for centuries. Along the pilgrimage routes to Rome, wine was once safer to drink than water, making the taverns and vineyards of Tuscany and Umbria essential stops for travelers crossing the country. Today, Tuscany leads with savory Sangiovese, while Umbria and Marche quietly overdeliver with earthy reds and vibrant whites. This is also where the tomato reigns supreme; its bright acidity and sweetness perfectly matched by the tang and structure of Sangiovese — proof of the Italian saying, "if it grows together, it goes together." Olive oil replaces butter, sun-drenched vegetables fill the table, and these are wines built firmly with food in mind.

South Italy & Islands

Molise – Campania - Puglia - Basilicata - Sicily - Sardinia

Southern Italy is where wine becomes louder, warmer and a little less interested in restraint. Long before the north built its grand wine estates, the ancient Greeks were planting vines across the south, calling the region Oenotria — "the land of wine." From the volcanic slopes of Etna and Vesuvius to the sunbaked vineyards of Puglia and the coastal winds of Sardinia, these are some of Italy's oldest wine cultures. Expect bold reds, salty whites and ancient grape varieties shaped by heat, sea air and dramatic landscapes. Olive oil flows freely, chilli creeps onto the plate, and these are wines built for grilled fish, slow-cooked ragùs and tables that never stay quiet for long.

South Italy & Islands

Southern Italy is where wine becomes louder, warmer and a little less interested in restraint. Long before the north built its grand wine estates, the ancient Greeks were planting vines across the south, calling the region Oenotria — "the land of wine." From the volcanic slopes of Etna and Vesuvius to the sunbaked vineyards of Puglia and the coastal winds of Sardinia, these are some of Italy's oldest wine cultures. Expect bold reds, salty whites and ancient grape varieties shaped by heat, sea air and dramatic landscapes. Olive oil flows freely, chilli creeps onto the plate, and these are wines built for grilled fish, slow-cooked ragùs and tables that never stay quiet for long.
